105 Years of Educating Aquarists

THE PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE

The new year is here, and we rung it in with our speaker, Jeff Bolbach. Jeff has spoken at BAS before and this time his discussion was great again. Jeff's presentation was about "Getting Rich Breeding Fish." Although it was a cold night, we still had approximately 100 members show up for Jeff, and our auction -- or perhaps maybe just the cake -- either way, it was a good night.

This month, our guest speaker will be Joe Caparatta, owner of Manhattan Aquarium. Joe will be speaking on the "Triton Method" for reef tanks. Joe has spoken previously at BAS and has always been a great supporter of our Society.

Doors open at 7:30. As always, there's free parking and refreshments.

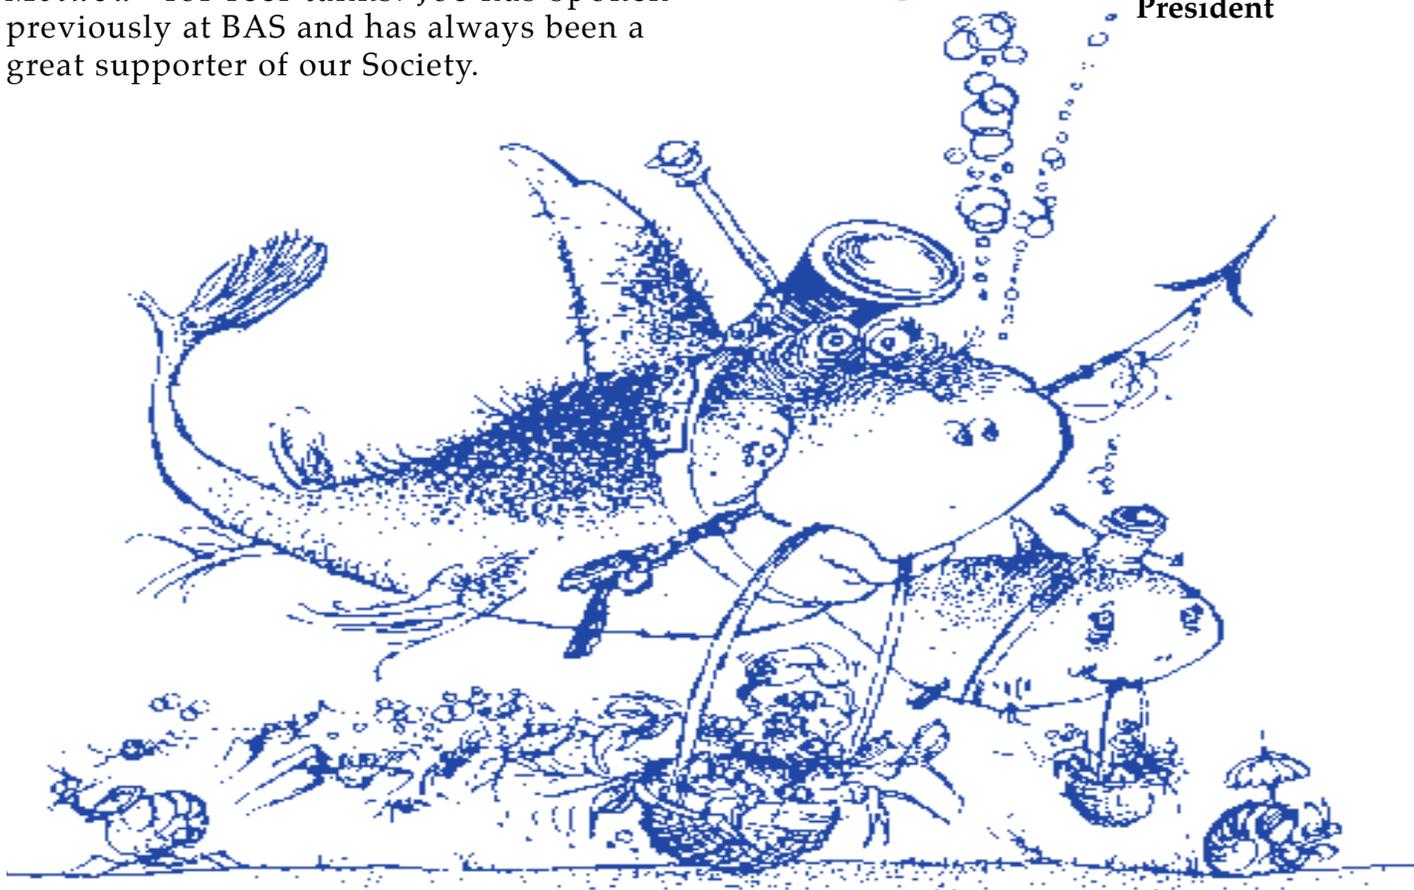

Remember, we can always use help. If anyone wants to help out in any way, please let us know. See me personally or any officer or board member. If anyone has any topics they want to hear expert speakers on, or any specific speaker, please tell us that also.

We would like to thank our members and our sponsors for their constant generous donations that keep us going. Anyone who has any aquatic items, supplies or equipment, and that would include healthy live-stock of fish, corals or plants, we always welcome the donation.

Thanks and see you next month!

Steven

Steven Matassa,
President

SCIENTISTS: SHARK NURSERY FOUND OFF LI

BY ELLEN YAN

ellen.yan@newsday.com

A nursery grows in the Great South Bay — and the young have several rows of teeth!

Fifteen juvenile sand tiger sharks have been tagged and tracked there in the past four years, making the bay a nursery ground for a protected species whose numbers have fallen worldwide, according to the Brooklyn-based New York Aquarium, which is heading the research. Ten were caught this year, and the five tagged in previous seasons have returned to the same section of the bay, a behavior known as “site fidelity,” scientists said.

The feeding and growing ground is exciting for Long Island’s marine biologists because the species has been overfished and hurt by being caught up in trawls and nets. The sharks’ presence in the nursery means they’re finding food in the bay, such as bluefish and bass, and protection against predators, including other sharks and people, experts said.

“If they’re doing well, then you know the whole system is doing well,” said marine biologist Joe Yaiullo, who founded the Long Island Aquarium in Riverhead, which has four sand tiger sharks. “It provides even more emphasis to protect those areas.”

The sand tiger shark is common in waters off Long Island but there are not a lot of them, he said. They are light brown, sometimes with darker red or brown spots, and reach lengths up to more than 10 feet. Yaiullo said boaters and fishers often mistake them for the more common sand shark and smooth dogfish shark. No one knows how many sand tiger sharks feed or roam off Long Island, but the New York Aquarium’s research was considered a turning point in quantifying the state of health for this species. According to researchers there, only a handful of sand tiger shark nurseries have been identified, including one off Massachusetts.

Scientists take a blood sample from a captured juvenile sand tiger shark in the Great South Bay.

The New York Aquarium began tracking sand tiger sharks in the bay in 2011 after one of its scientists got a photo of a dead juvenile sand tiger shark from a marina along the bay. Scientists then started the tagging study using acoustic transmitters in Great South Bay. The sand tiger sharks they caught and then released were several months old to 5 years old, aquarium officials said.

“Sand tiger shark pups are not born here but migrate from down south to spend the summers as juveniles in New York’s coastal waters,” Merry Camhi, director of local marine conservation for the Wildlife Conservation Society, which runs the New York Aquarium, said in a news release. “The acoustically tagged animals in our study will help us better understand where the sharks go, their habitat needs, and how we can better protect them.”

Aquarium officials say there are many questions about the nursery. They don’t know how much of the bay is being used by sand tiger sharks. They want to find out how many juveniles spend their summers there and more about what they eat.

The sand tiger shark is considered a “species of concern” by the National Marine Fisheries Service and “critically endangered” in other parts of the world. They have been overfished as food and for their fins. Mating occurs every other year, with one or two pups in an average litter, the federal agency said, and sharks grow slowly. As a further hit to their numbers, sand tigers are inadvertently caught in fishing trawls, gillnets and longlines, the service said.

TIP OF THE MONTH

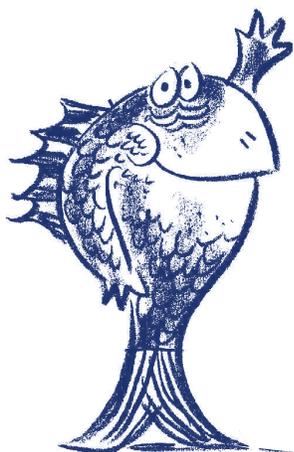

If you were lucky enough to get a marine aquarium for Christmas or are planning to get one, here are a few things to keep in mind: Definitely get the largest tank you can afford or have space for. This will help to ensure more stable water conditions for your marine animals. Also keep in mind that all-glass tanks are best for marine fish or corals. Salt water cannot damage a glass tank. Make sure the glass is thick enough to withstand the pressure of the water.

If you intend to upgrade your new system in the future, make sure to allow enough room to house the new equipment, protein skimmers etc., and other components that need space and height.

As for heaters, allow about 2 watts per liter of water. Larger tanks benefit from two heaters. Keep one at each end of the tank to better control water temperature.

Enjoy your new marine aquarium and, to keep up with the care of your corals or fish, make sure you attend BAS marine events to learn about the newest techniques in the hobby.

NEWS & NOTES

- On Tuesday, Jan. 5, 2016 A great white shark has died after barely three days in a rare case of captivity in a Japanese aquarium. The 3.5 meter (11.5-foot) shark, was accidentally caught in a net in southwestern Japan on Tuesday, died early Friday, according to Okinawa Churaumi Aquarium. The cause of death was under investigation. Keeping a great white shark in captivity is extremely difficult, it needs to keep swimming constantly to get oxygen and maintain its body temperature.

An official for People for the Ethical Treatment of Animals, or PETA, Asia, criticized keeping the shark in captivity as "cruel and wrong." "The cause of death is clear: captivity. The shark never had to die like this," said Jason Baker, PETA's vice president of international campaigns."

- Eheim Introduces the 2203 miniFlat Shallow Water Filter

The Eheim miniflat filter is ideal for ripariums and paludariums that need shallow water filtration. The Eheim miniFlat shallow water filter, model number 2203, was tested for many months and performed flawlessly in a brackish water mudskipper habitat. The filter can be used to power a spray bar within the mudskipper's partially-filled, ten-gallon aquarium. The spray bar helps to maintain high humidity which is necessary for the emergent growth of aquatic plants adorning the riparium. The filter is designed to be placed directly on the bottom of a small aquatic habitat. It is not intended to be used resting on substrate such as gravel. It is equipped with suction cups which are to be secured to the glass bottom of a tank. Remove any algae or debris from the area where the filter is to be installed and gently press the filter into place. The suction cups are tremendously effective and will tenaciously hold the filter in place.

- Lifegard Aquatics has introduced a new high-flow rate, affordably priced Lifegard PG9000 pump. The energy efficient pump has a small footprint and is designed for submersible or external application such as freshwater ponds, fountains, waterfalls hydroponic systems, irrigation systems and water features, The PG 9000 features wet rotor/wet bearings technology that enables cooler running, while the included pre-filter screen handles large particles for less maintenance.
